Option: USA 1919–1941

Question 5 (25 marks)

- (a) To what extent did social and economic differences between rural and urban America transform US society from 1919-1941. In your answer, refer to Source F.

The transfer of our population from the soil [farm] to the city has put a terrific strain on America's institution of democracy. By increasing the complexity of living, this trek to the city is making inadequate many of the old governmental methods. By submerging the individual in the crowd, it lessens his sense of civic responsibility and thus opens the way for political machines which thrive better in urban than in rural conditions. The political machine is not the root of the trouble, but rather the fruit of the trouble.

- (b) How did the New Deal address the social and economic failings of previous Republican governments? In your answer, refer to Source G.

When we all burst into Washington . . . we found every essential idea [of the New Deal] enacted in the 100-day Congress in the Hoover administration itself. The essentials of the NRA [National Recovery Administration], the PWA [Public Works Administration], the emergency relief setup were all there. Even the AAA [Agricultural Adjustment Act] was known to the Department of Agriculture. Only the TVA [Tennessee Valley Authority] and the Securities Act was drawn from other sources. The RFC [Reconstruction Finance Corporation], probably the greatest recovery agency, was of course a Hoover measure, passed.

Journalist Horst Krüger, then a schoolboy, recalled how his father protected his job in the government. quoted in Horst Krüger, A Crack in the Wall: Growing Up Under Hitler (New York: Fromm International Publishing Corp., 1982), 19–20.

All his life he left home for the ministry at 8:23 a.m., traveling second class. At home, he read the old-line newspaper and the local daily, never joined the party, ...never subscribed to the Völkischer Beobachter, the Nazi party organ—but for twenty minutes, until the train pulled into Friedrichstrasse Station, he held it up before his face so that others might recognize his loyalty to the new people's state. At Friedrichstrasse he left the paper behind....

All his life, he came home at 4:21 p.m., always on the same train, always in the same second-class compartment, if possible always at the same corner window, always holding a briefcase full of work in his right hand, with his left showing his monthly commutation ticket—he never jumped off the moving train. He had achieved his goal; he was a German civil servant. And no matter whether the government was headed by Noske or Ebert, Scheidemann or Brüning, Papen or Hitler, he was obligated to faith and loyalty. His office was his world.

An obituary of Stresemann which appeared in the British newspaper The Times, 4 October 1929.

By the death of Herr Stresemann, Germany has lost her ablest politician. Stresemann worked for the rebuilding of his shattered country. When he became Chancellor, Germany was in ruins. The French were in the Ruhr and the problem of reparations hung over a bankrupt Germany which was seething with unrest. He had extremists to the right and left to obstruct him at every turn. Germany is now orderly and prosperous and has a new standing in the affairs of Europe.

Munich Observer, March 1932.

The National Socialist movement, assembled at this hour, as a fighting squad around its leader, today calls on the entire German people to join its ranks, and to pave a path that will bring Adolf Hitler to the head of the nation and thus

LEAD GERMANY TO FREEDOM

Hitler is the password of all who believe in Germany's resurrection. Hitler is the last hope of those who were deprived of everything: of farm and home, of savings, unemployment, survival ... Hitler was bequeathed the legacy of two million dead comrades of the World War, who died not for the present system of the gradual destruction of our nation, but for Germany's future.

John Maynard Keynes, The Economic Consequences of the Peace, 1919. Keynes was financial representative for the British treasury to the 1919 Paris Peace Conference.

The treaty includes no provisions for the economic rehabilitation of Europe -- nothing to make the defeated Central empires into good neighbours, nothing to stabilise the new states of Europe, nothing to reclaim Russia; nor does it promote in any way a compact of economic solidarity amongst the Allies themselves; no arrangement was reached at Paris for restoring the disordered finances of France and Italy, or to adjust the systems of the Old World and the New ... It is an extraordinary fact that the fundamental economic problem of a Europe starving and disintegrating before their eyes, was the one question in which it was impossible to arouse the interest of the Four. Reparation was their main excursion into the economic field, and they settled it as a problem of theology, of politics, of electoral chicane, from every point of view except that of the economic future of the states whose destiny they were handling.
