Perhaps the World Ends Here

The world begins at a kitchen table. No matter what, we must eat to live.

The gifts of earth are brought and prepared, set on the table. So it has been since creation, and it will go on.

We chase chickens or dogs away from it. Babies teethe at the corners. They scrape their knees under it.

It is here that children are given instructions on what it means to be human. We make men at it, we make women.

At this table we gossip, recall enemies and the ghosts of lovers.

Our dreams drink coffee with us as they put their arms around our children. They laugh with us at our poor falling-down selves and as we put ourselves back together once again at the table.

This table has been a house in the rain, an umbrella in the sun.

Wars have begun and ended at this table. It is a place to hide in the shadow of terror. A place to celebrate the terrible victory.

We have given birth on this table, and have prepared our parents for burial here.

At this table we sing with joy, with sorrow. We pray of suffering and remorse. We give thanks.

Perhaps the world will end at the kitchen table, while we are laughing and crying, eating of the last sweet bite.

The Sympathizer

I am a spy, a sleeper, a spook, a man of two faces. Perhaps not surprisingly, I am also a man of two minds. I am not some misunderstood mutant from a comic book or a horror movie, although some have treated me as such. I am simply able to see any issue from both sides. Sometimes I flatter myself that this is a talent, and although it is admittedly one of a minor nature, it is perhaps also the sole talent I possess. At other times, when I reflect on how I cannot help but observe the world in such a fashion, I wonder if what I have should even be called talent. After all, a talent is something you use, not something that uses you. The talent you cannot not use, the talent that possesses you—that is a hazard, I must confess. But in the month when this confession begins, my way of seeing the world still seemed more of a virtue than a danger, which is how some dangers first appear.

The month in question was April, the cruelest month. It was the month in which a war that had run on for a very long time would lose its limbs, as is the way of wars. It was a month that meant everything to all the people in our small part of the world and nothing to most people in the rest of the world. It was a month that was both an end of a war and the beginning of ... well, “peace” is not the right word, is it, my dear Commandant? It was a month when I awaited the end behind the walls of a villa where I had lived for the previous five years, the villa’s walls glittering with broken brown glass and crowned with rusted barbed wire. I had my own room at the villa, much like I have my own room in your camp, Commandant. Of course, the proper term for my room is an “isolation cell”, and instead of a housekeeper who comes to clean every day, you have provided me with a baby-faced guard who does not clean at all. But I am not complaining. Privacy, not cleanliness, is my only prerequisite for writing this confession.

Text 4 – Poem

and a tree

and a tree is a promise safe-kept by a seed, and a tree is a dance
that is swung by the breeze,

and a tree is an engine spinning only on air and water and light;
nothing lost, nothing spare,

and a tree is a king
who is topped with a crown, (and a tree never once loses touch with the ground) and a tree is a home with numberless doors,

and a tree is a world
for an ant to explore,

and a tree is a gift (for a tree is a lung)
and a tree is a song that is whispered and sung by the bees and the birds, and in rustles and creaks,
yes, a tree is a song
that is sung without words,

and a tree is a lesson
in the meaning of roots,
and how out of the mud swell the sweetest of fruits,

Text 4 continues on page 7

Text 4 (continued)

and a tree is a story of hope and repair,
or perhaps more a question;
a wish or a prayer,
for a tree (plus a tree)
shows us how we might share, and when we should grow
and when we should sleep and what we could lose and what we must keep.

Little One

Chapter 1

It was the hottest day of summer, a Saturday in January. I sat cross-legged in my study, surrounded by piles of undergraduate textbooks, flicking through them, leaving light fingerprints of sweat on the pages. Having studied Science and Law for six years at university, I was about to embark on a PHD in genetics, and so was packing my old textbooks away. Seeing myself on each meticulously highlighted page, I sighed lightly, remembering all the time I'd spent, understanding, memorising, and ultimately regurgitating those passages, in cold, cavernous exam halls. The focus was now going to be on experiments not exams, data not grades, discovery not curriculum. Occasionally I stopped to read an extract, which brought back even more memories of lecturers, tutorials and classmates. It was a job well done, graduation with honours, all behind me now.

Mum looked into my room again. She had something on her mind. She hoped I wouldn't notice but it was impossible not to – she had poked her head in umpteen times that day. Having lived with my parents my whole life, I could tell when they were generally busy and when they were 'hovering'. The phrase 'helicopter parenting' could very well have been coined for them and especially for Mum. I knew she loved me, but at times it was at the point of suffocating her only child.

'Mama,' I said, 'What's up?'

Mum stopped and leaned against the door frame. She didn't respond for some time. 'Eh,' she finally said, 'nothing.'

'You keep walking past my door. A dozen times now. It's not nothing.'

She rubbed her hands together pensively. Eventually, she asked; 'Are you busy?'

I returned to flicking pages. 'Matters of world importance,' I replied.

Mum was silent. Failing to sense my sarcasm, she continued to stare at me. After a few moments, I looked back up and met her gaze. It was as if she were assessing me, sizing me up for something. As she gazed longer and deeper into my eyes than I thought anyone ever could, I felt lightheaded. There were generations in that look. Mum's stature was small, and her hands tiny, with purple veins protruding, her fingers beginning to turn in with arthritis. But at that moment she appeared like a giant.

Slowly, almost cautiously, I closed my book. 'Mama ...' I said, '*ela*¹, what is it?'

Finally, she spoke: 'Can you come to my room. I've something to tell you.'

My stomach tightened.

As I followed Mum down the carpeted hall, a memory cut across my brain. The last time she had insisted we talk in her room, was during my first year of university. My aunt in Greece had died suddenly.

‘Please Panagiotis, sit down’.

Mum always called me by my Greek name in moments of significance. It had been there in hospital during emergencies, in Church during baptisms and funerals, and at home during lectures for teenage misbehaviour. I didn’t mind it, but I knew what it meant. Even after all this time, those memories are with me, every day of every week.

Mum took up position on the edge of the bed, her bare feet resting on a thick blue rug. Looking down at her hands, she began.

Paper 1 – Texts and Human Experiences

Section I

(20 marks)

Question 1 (4 marks)

Outcomes Assessed: EN12-1, EN12-2, EN12-3, EN12-7

Targeted Performance Bands: 2-6

Criteria	Marks
• Analyses effectively, with well-chosen supporting evidence, how the image conveys contradictory experiences of family	4
• Analyses, using some supporting evidence, how the image conveys contradictory experiences of family	3
• Describes some family experiences in the image	2
• Provides some information about family in response to the question	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

- The ironic portrayal of the family on the TV as opposed to the lived experience of family
- Family on TV seated closely; vectors of eye contact show all attention directed at the boy; facial expressions - all smiling
- In contrast – the four members of the family are doing different activities. No eye contact between them indicates not paying attention to each other. Ironically, the baby is the only one watching how a family “should” behave.
- TV family – taking interest in their child; “real” family ignoring children, absorbed in their various devices
- The “perfect” family contrast between the two families – family eating around table compared with family sitting around the television absorbed in their own activities – disconnected
- Salient images – the ideal family on the TV, but ironically, the real family depict the self-absorbed lived experience of mealtimes

Question 2 (5 marks)Outcomes Assessed: EN12-1, EN12-2, EN12-3, EN12-5, EN12-7*Targeted Performance Bands: 2-6

Criteria	Marks
• Analyses insightfully how the poet reveals the importance of the kitchen table using detailed, well-chosen supporting evidence	5
• Analyses how the poet reveals the importance of the kitchen table using well-chosen supporting evidence	3-4
• Describes how the poet reveals the importance of the kitchen table with some supporting evidence	2
• Provides some relevant information about the poem	1

Answers could include reference to the following:The kitchen table is important, integral to the life of the family:

- “The world begins...” opening line, showing the primary nature of the table
- “It will go on, and it is a gift of earth...” suggests nurture through food/meals; the legacy of memories it will provide
- Listing/lexical chain of human experiences – how comprehensive they are - encompasses all aspects of family life – chasing chickens, babies teething, scraping knees, “gossip, recall enemies”
- First person plural we/our– indicating universality of the experience
- Kitchen table as a metaphor for the importance of family connections, gatherings, memories, cycle of life – eg birth, teething, loving, death
- Passage of time - “We have begun and ended at this table”
- Biblical allusion -” gifts of earth...so it has been since creation...”
- Combines both happy and sad experiences – contrast - birth/death; joy/sorrow; laughing and crying - combines all human experiences, ages. Shows the interconnected, cohesive nature of our lives.
- Table described metaphorically “This table has been a house in the rain, an umbrella in the sun.” - pathetic fallacy reflecting the range of human emotions
- The table represents the universality of the human experience – table representing the centre of family life “No matter what, we must eat to live.” Eat, here, can be metaphorical for the nurture provided by family as well as the necessity of daily nourishment

Question 3 (3 marks)Outcomes Assessed: EN12-1, EN12-2, EN12-3, EN12-7Targeted Performance Bands: 2-5

Criteria	Marks
• Explains effectively how Text 3 demonstrates the paradoxes of human character using aptly chosen textual evidence	3
• Explains how Text 3 demonstrates the paradoxes of human character using supporting textual evidence	2
• Provides some information about the text in response to the question	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

- The character conveys a sense of pride that his identity is multifaceted often contradictory, parts. 'I am a spy, a sleeper, a spook, a man of two faces.' 'I am also a man of two minds.' 'I am simply able to see any issue from both sides.' However, by the end of the first paragraph, he expresses a sense of caution that such multiplicity is dangerous or exposes one to danger.
- He explains that talent is, paradoxically, something positive but also problematic, 'After all, a talent is something you use, not something that uses you,' and 'the talent you cannot not use, the talent that possesses you - that is a hazard.'
- Use of elliptical language or rhetoric raises questions and provokes the reader to doubt initial assumptions, creates a sense of an unreliable narrator 'My way of seeing the world still seemed more of a virtue than a danger, which is how some dangers first appear.'
- Use of contrast to convey the fickleness or unpredictability of life – he moves from a life living in villas to 'isolation cells'.

Question 4

Outcomes Assessed: EN12-1, EN12-2, EN12-3, EN12-5, EN12-7

Targeted Performance Bands: 2-6

Criteria	Marks
• Analyses effectively how Wakeling uses language to communicate a sense of hope, using well-chosen textual evidence	4
• Analyses how Wakeling uses language to communicate a sense of hope, using relevant textual evidence	3
• Explains how Wakeling uses language to communicate a sense of hope, using some textual evidence	2
• Describes aspects of the text	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

Wakeling employs lower case for the title “and a tree” to show that although the tree is a common entity or sight, it is of great significance and embodies a great richness for the human experience:

- Each “sentence” or line of the poem begins in lower case to reinforce that significance or richness
- Each “sentence” or line of the poem starts in the middle: “and a tree...” representing its omnipresence
- The use of indefinite article “a” implies that it is not a specific tree but any tree – can apply to all people therefore communicating a sense of hope for all of us
- Use of metaphors to define and emphasise the importance of a tree: a tree is a promise, an engine, a king, a home, a world, a gift, a song, a lesson in the meaning of roots, a story. Two or three of these metaphors could be singled out for further analysis to further develop its effectiveness:
 - “a tree is a promise” signifies hope, as, “safe-kept by a seed” it ultimately reaches full growth
 - “a tree is a dance/that is swung by a breeze” conveys the promise of joy or happiness
 - “a tree is an engine/spinning only on air/ and water and light’ nothing lost, nothing spare”- from the very basics or elements needed to provide and sustain life the tree becomes a driving force – contemplation or awareness of this communicates a sense of hope
 - “and a tree is a king” ... “topped with a crown” which “never once/loses touch with the ground” - the knowledge of the tree perceived as being grounded is analogous for human perseverance in challenging times, significant in providing a sense of hope for the future
 - a gift – as well as its being freely given, it serves as a lung- that is, life-giving
 - “... a lesson/in the meaning of roots” - being rooted, as in being grounded can teach us all what is needed when times are challenging- to hold our ground
- Contradiction, paradox, or anomaly in “how out of the mud/swell the sweetest of fruits” - positive imagery-gives a sense of hope in the benefits of perseverance
- Wakeling uses positive imagery to convey a sense of hope through her use of the metaphor “a tree is a story/of hope and repair for a tree (plus a tree)/ shows us how we might share”

positives to convey how things could be; the rhyming of “repair” and “share” reinforces and imparts an affirmative statement

- Lineation: the poem ends with a single line which stands alone- not part of a stanza- “and what we must keep” emphasising the salient or dominant lessons to be learnt from the seemingly inconsequential tree
- Information in brackets/parenthesis adds extra information of a tree’s attributes

Question 5 (4 marks)Outcomes Assessed: EN12-1, EN12-3, EN12-5, EN12-7Targeted Performance Bands: 2-6

Criteria	Marks
• Analyses effectively how a sense of tension is created in the extract, using well-chosen supporting evidence	4
• Analyses how a sense of tension is created in the extract, using relevant supporting evidence	3
• Explains how a sense of tension is created in the extract, using some textual evidence	2
• Describes aspects of the text	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

- Use of pathetic fallacy, ‘It was the hottest day of summer’ to convey a sense of uncomfortableness.
- Tension is created between the speaker and his mother as he ignores her desire to communicate, he feels her presence as an intrusion.
- The tension between the revealed and the not yet revealed creates a sense of anticipation.
- The references to past revelations regarding death creates a sense of foreboding as he misinterprets her intentions to connect.
- His patronising description of her care as ‘helicopter parenting’ and his dismissive use of sarcasm in response to her question, ‘Are you busy?’ I returned to flicking pages. ‘Matters of world importance.’
- Descriptions of body language ...
- The mother’s use of his full name conveys her desire to regain some power or control.
- The time lapse between the mother’s settling herself and disclosure; she has the knowledge about something potentially momentous, he must wait: “Mum took up position on the edge of the bed, her bare feet resting on a thick blue rug. Looking down at her hands, she began.”
